AAPA to Host Asia and Pacific Turboprop Safety Conference

Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia – The Association of Asia Pacific Airlines (AAPA) announced today that it will host the Asia and Pacific Turboprop Safety Conference, on 26 and 27 June 2024 in Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia.

AAPA has been actively working with the region's turboprop operators since 2014, and has embarked on this initiative to support the region's large number of regional turboprop operators, who operate crucial airline services to many cities and remote destinations.

AAPA has long identified the unique challenges faced by turboprop operators, particularly in the Asia and Pacific region. The upcoming conference aims to bring together industry stakeholders, including AAPA member airlines, other operators, and industry bodies, to exchange insights, best practices, and innovative solutions.

"The industry believes wholeheartedly that safety is paramount for the industry and no airline should be left behind," said Subhas Menon, Director General at AAPA. "The Asia and Pacific Turboprop Safety Conference underscores our commitment to promoting safety excellence across all segments of commercial aviation."

The conference will feature a comprehensive agenda covering various aspects of turboprop operations, including emergency response, safety culture, flight data monitoring as well as unique airport and operational considerations. Attendees can expect engaging discussions, informative presentations, and opportunities for networking.

AAPA extends a warm invitation to all turboprop operators in the Asia and Pacific region to participate in this landmark event. Together, we can further raise standards and ensure the continued success of commercial aviation in our Asia and Pacific region.
